History Education in MA

In the wake of state education reform legislation enacted in 1993, the performance of MA public school students has improved dramatically. Under reform, students are required to demonstrate basic knowledge of English, math and science to graduate from high school, but the law also requires MA student to study things like the nation’s founding documents.

Do you think all MA public school students should study our nation's founding and history?

- Yes: 90%
- No: 8%
- Undecided: 3%

Do you think there is a correlation between Massachusetts students not having to pass a history test and the fact that they don’t do as well in history as they do in English, math and science?
US History as MCAS Requirement

For the class of 2012, US history was scheduled to join English, math and science as subjects in which students would have to pass an MCAS test to graduate from high school. But in 2009 the Commissioner of Education recommended, and the state Board of Elementary Education agreed, to postpone the US history graduation requirement.
